WAS MARRIED VERY YOUNG

Rev. Mr. Jennings Tells the Story of His Elopement at College.

Trial of the Culprits by the Hanover Faculty -The Wife Soon Tired of the Match-Minister Outwitted.

The Rev. Oliver W. Jennings, pastor of the Shelby-street Christian Church, who is so unfortunate as to be mixed up in a divorce suit, called at the Journal office last evening to make a few statements concerning his former marriage. Mr. Jennings, in order to make the matter perfectly clear, reviewed the escapade from beginning to end, which is here given as he told it:

While he was a student at Hanover College, Jefferson county, this State, in 1881, he became greatly smitten with a member of the "annex" of that institution, as the men delighted to call it, or more properly speaking the female department, a Miss Mary Ryle by name, whose home was at Burlington, Boone county, Kentucky. She was an orphan and had been sent there by her grandmother, who was her guardian. Her age was eighteen and Jennings was twenty. What was at first supposed by the other students to be only a slight indisposition gradually developed into a violent and malignant case of love.

STORY OF THE ELOPEMENT.

They resolved to elope. Accordingly, on the 22d of October. after an acquaintance of only six weeks, the gay young couple stole away from beneath the wings of their watchful alma mater and fled to Madison, Ind., where they were met by Edgar Allhands, a chum of young Jennings, who was to do the necessary swearing for a license, procure a preacher and, in short, perform all the functions of best man. The three proceeded to the office of the county clerk, where Allhands swore that Jennings "was of suitable age to marry," as the ques-tion had been put to him by the clerk. The three then went with the license to the office of Judge J. G. Allison, and the marriage ceremony was performed. Immediately after the ceremony the wedding party returned to Hanover, the groom going to his mother's home (his mother living temporarily in Hanover while her son and daughters were being educated) and the blushing young bride to her boardinghouse. Both remained there, except when they went to their recitations, and concealed all intimation of what they had done. They did not live together, or even see each other, except in class-room or on the campus, passing to and from dormitory to recitation hall. Three days later the Madison Daily Star got hold of the little romance through the marriage-license book. and then, of course, the wide-awake reporter hustled over to see Judge Allison and got what he had to say, and on the 25th of October the whole thing came out in glaring head-lines. "TRIAL BY JURY."

Then it was the faculty's turn, which opportunity they lost no time in utilizing. Forthwith the college officers held starchamber sessions every half hour in the day from 8 A. M. to 9 P. M., and at the last one the young culprits were asked in. Two charges were preferred against each of the principals and three against the "second" in this little match. Mr. Jennings was charged, first, with contracting a secret marriage, and, second, with allowing Allhands to swear that the groom was "of suitable age to marry." thereby representing a lie. The poor, distressed little bride was ordered to stand up, and, in the presence of all assembled, the stern president, with a quivering voice and grave mien told her, very much after the fashion of a judge sentencing a condemned murderer, that she had broken the rules of the college by being clandestinely married and by leaving the town without permission.

Then came young Allhands's turn. When bidden he staggered to the center of the arena, and, facing the stern old prex, was told that he was the worst pea in the pod, or words to that effect, and after saying "Yes, sir," to this, the foreman of this pedagogie jury informed Allhands that be had been indicted on three counts. First, assisting in a clandestine marriage; second, in implying a falsehood; third, in leaving the college town without permission.

The president then announced that the three would be given to a certain time, naming the date, to file a bill of exceptions. When the time for a second hearing came around Jennings declined to appear before the faculty, but sent it word that he wished it understood that this was a free country and a man had a right to marry whoever, whenever and however he pleased, providing he got the license, and that he wished his name and that of his wife obliterated from the college roll. He then went with his bride to her grandmother's home at Barlington, Ky., where he was cordially received, and at once made a great impression with the old lady, who thought anything Mary would de was REPENTED AT LEISURE.

But soon after their arrival there clouds began to gather over the happy little home in Maiden Lane. Without were honeysuckles and trailing wisteria nearly hiding the old-fashioned cottage from view behind the outer trellis, while within were unkind, petulent words, regrets for youthful folly and desires to be free again. Matters grew worse by degrees, and the wife of only a few weeks made no denial of the fact that her love had complete-ly failed for her new husband, and that she longed to be single again and back at Hanover. Young Jennings brought her to his mother's home in Hanover, where the young couple received nothing but solid advice. Mrs. Jennings, sr., advised them to separate for a year, and then if, at the expiration of that time, they wanted to live together again, all well and good; if not, by all means have a quiet, legal separation. Mrs. Jennings. jr., readily agreed to this, but her husband says he was beart-broken.

His brother came up to Hanover from Westport, Ky., and took her to her grand-mother's, at Burlington. It had been agreed upon by Mrs. Jennings, the mother, that she would support the young wife during this year of probation, although this was quite unnecessary, as the girl had about $3,000 in her own name. Still she couldn't get at it at this time. The year came to a close, but instead of bringing him joy, it only added to his sorrow, for the mail brought him one day a notification from the clerk of the court of Boone county, Kentucky, that he was made defendant in a complaint for divorce, filed by Mary Ryle Jennings. He wanted to go at once to Burlington, but his parents refused to allow it, and the result was that the case went by default, and divorce was

NOT HER MONEY HE WANTED. Concerning the article in yesterday morning's Journal bearing on this story, as told briefly by the friends of the present Mrs. Jennings, the minister said: "The divorce was not granted on the grounds of cruelty, for Miss Ryle was a proud, highspirited Kentucky girl, and not the kind who would have tolerated such a thing or acknowledged it if it had been the case. She is not now single or teacher in the schools of Louisville, for she subsequently married a Professor Whitehead, a Kentucky teacher, and the last I heard of her was living happily with him. They moved to Elizabethtown, Ky, where he had a school. It is equally false that I married her for her money, and, being disappointed in not getting it, deserted her. When we were married I didn't know she had any money, and after I learned it never made any effort to get it. The subject of money never caused any unhappiness between us, and this is the first time I ever heard this report mentioned. "After the divorce had been granted I taught school in Westport, Ky., my native home, for a year, and in September, 1884, went to Louisville, where I took charge of the Portland-avenue Christian Church. I stayed there a year, then went to the Coilege of the Bible, at Lexington, where, after a two-years' course, I graduated one of the honor men of my class. In the fall of 1887 I received a pastorate in Columbia, Tenn., where I was installed as the our readers who are suffering from defect-Dastor of the only Christian Church | ive hearing a rare opportunity.

of the town. There I met my present wife, Miss Soulie Phillips, in October of that year, and after a courtship of four months we were married Feb. 22, 1888. She was a member of my church, together with all her family, and they appeared to like me very much. I told them the whole story of my first unfortunate marriage, and they accepted it as it really was, a youthful folly, and gave their consent to our marriage. She had lived in Columbia four years, having moved there with her parents from Eminence, Ky,"

THE PREACHER OUTWITTED. Mrs. Jennings, since she applied for a divorce, has been living at Danville, Ind., with some of her mother's friends. Day before yesterday she was called to this city upon some matter relating to her suit, and while walking along Washington street saw her husband appreaching from the other direction. Rev. Jennings also spied his wife. The latter wished to avoid a meeting, and dodged into a store on Washington street, which is owned by a relative of the family with whom she had been staying at Danville. Rev. Jennings wanted to have an interview with his wife, so he stopped in front of the store determined upon waiting there until she should come out. On the other hand, Mrs. Jennings didn't want to meet her husband, but she wanted to go back to Danville, and it was about train time. While she was pondering over this dilemma a brother of the gentleman who owns the store came in. He grasped the situation at once, and determined to outwit the reverend gentleman, who was so patiently holding the fort on the ontside. Mrs. Jennings gladly placed herself under the young man's protection, and they left the store from the rear door. Reaching the alley, they walked east to Meridian street, thence south to the Union Station, and arrived there just in time to catch the train. In the meantime Rev. Jennings was holding a lonely and not exactly comfortable vigil in front of the store, and did not realize for some time that he was the victim of a coup d'etat.

Death That Recalls a Gloomy Series of Tragedies-Once Prominent and Wealthy.

The funeral of Dr. Edward Griffith will take place this forenoon, at 10 o'clock, from his late residence, No. 276 Alvord street. The funeral sermon will be preached by Rev. Dr. Joseph S. Jenckes, and the interment will be made in Crown Hill Cemetery, where Dr. Griffith has long owned a lot. For many years, upon the streets of this city, the bent but active figure of this old man, who died on Tuesday afternoon at the age of ninety years and one month, has been noted by those who knew of the tragedy that darkened the last years of his life, but never clouded his mind or permanently embittered him. He was a man of wonderful strength of character and firmness of will, and, at the same time, of strong religious convictions. He was a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, and Sunday after Sunday for several years may have been seen at service occupying a seat well to the front and near to the pulpit, as his hearing was thickening with ad-

His death was the result of an accident. About two weeks ago, while crossing Massachusetts avenue, he was nearly run down by a young man who was driving reck-lessly. The Doctor fell, it is said, tripped by his own cane, and was carried to his home, though insisting that he was not greatly hurt. The next day, however, traumatic pneumonia began, and death was the result.

Dr. Griffith was born in Maryland, and came to this city from Louisville, Ky., where he had lived for several years. At one time in his life he practiced medicine. and following that was for thirty-five years or more, until compelled to give up the profession by reason of advanced age, a practical dentist.

In 1883 the Doctor lived with his daughter and son-in-law, the late Edward T. Johnson, a lawyer, at No. 474 North Pennsylvania street. In that year Johnson's wife, Dr. Griffith's only daughter, was, one one morning, found dead in her bed, with a revolver, one barrel of which was discharged. Johnson claimed that his wife had, in letters, confessed to relations with a Tennesseean named Henry, a man twenty years her senior, whom, as alleged by Johnson, she said had obtained a singular control over her by mesmeric influence. Johnson afterwards went to Tennessee and killed Henry at Knoxville in that State, shooting him down without mercy. He was defended by Senator Voorhees and acquitted. Johnson, who was a consumptive, died a few months later.

Dr. Griffith always maintained that his daughter had been killed by Johnson, whom he did not hesitate to denounce as a scoundrel and cold-blooded murderer. The late Mai, J. W. Gordon, whom Dr. Griffith employed as his attorney in real-estate complications that ensued, believed, as did the Doctor, that Mrs. Johnson had not died by her own hand, and made much of the relation that a carriage had been driven to Johnson's house late upon the night of the tragedy.

The hatred that Johnson bore to his father-in-law was in some measure transmitted to Griffith Johnson, his grandson, the issue of this unhappy marriage. The latter, now in the government service at Washington, a boy in his teens when his father killed the Tennesseean, telegraphed to his grandfather. "Rejoice with me that my mother's memory has been vindicated."
The sturdy old Doctor, who firmly believed in his daughter's innocence of wrongdoing, refused to take this view, and replied: "I'll not. Your father has com-mitted murder." Young Johnson resented this, and from that time forward refused all association with his grandfather, and declined assistance from him.

At one time Dr. Griffith was possessed of considerable means, and claimed that he had lost nearly everything through his son-in-law. The Johnson homestead, No. 474 North Pennsylvania street, was mort-gaged for about $3,000, and Mrs. John-son, a short time before her death, transferred the property to her father and her son, so that the Doctor had a life interest in it. He claimed that he had given money to Johnson to pay off the mortgage, but that the latter had not paid it. The property was subsequently sold under foreclosure, the purchaser being William Dickson, who entered into a contract to pay the Doctor a dollar a day during his life and to pay $100 at his death for funeral expenses. Mr. Dickson has made the last payment. A few days ago he paid Dr. Jenekes $90 for the last quarter and yesterday he paid $100 for funeral expenses, thus terminating the Indiana Association Makes Various Changes-Investigating Assessment Benefit Societies.

The Indiana Association of Life Underwriters held its regular meeting at the Denison House Tuesday evening. After a supper the members repaired to one of the hotel pariors for the transaction of business and discussion. The business of the association consisted chiefly of amendments to the constitution and by-laws. Membership was extended to include local agents and solicitors in good standing. A reduction of membership fees was made from $5 to $1 per member. The time for holding regular meetings was changed from the second Tuesday to the second Monday of each month. Assessments was the subject for the evening discussion, and much valuable infor-mation regarding fraternal benefit associations of Indiana was, for the first time, brought to the attention of the association. It will continue its investigation of local assessment associations, the topic for the next meeting being. "The Masonic and Odd-fellows' Mutual Benefit Societies of Indiana.

DR. MITCHELL'S HARD LUCK

Series of Misfortunes That Brought Him Before an Insanity Commission.

Declared of Sound Mind-Lafavette Car-Works Sale Confirmed-Damage Suit from Fresh Paint-Court Briefs.

Dr. Frank Mitchell, one of the bestknown of the younger physicians of the city, who was arrested last week for drunkeness and subsequently taken before an insanity commission, believed to be bereft of his reason, was dismissed by the commission yesterday, it failing to find sufficient evidence to adjudge him insane. Dr. Mitchell has been in ill health most of his life, said to be due to his having swallowed a thimble when a baby, and the removing of which broke his nervous system. His father died about a month ago and left $2,000 to his wife. Mitchell resolved to get this, and went to his mother while she was ill last week to induce her to sign over the money to him. She refused and he took to drinking, ending in the jail.

Suing an Insolvent for Damages. Delila A. Dupree sues George L. W. Mack, the recently assigned shoe-dealer, for $8,000 damages. On Nov. 4 Mack painted a sign on the sidewalk in front of his store at 66 East Washington street, and before the paint had thoroughly dried Mrs. Dupree came along and slipped and fell, injuring her side and internally hurting herself. Dr. Parsons, her physician, testifies to having performd an operation on Mrs. Dupree as a result of the fall.

Heavy Fines by Buskirk, Judge Buskirk had on his war paint yesterday and soaked the fines in heavy and often. Sentenced for Burglary. John G. Alden, on a plea of guilty, was sentenced to the State's prison for three years by Judge Cox yesterday, for burglarionsly entering Jennie Pitman's house on the night of March 30. James Davis was indicted with Alden, but he has not been arraigned yet. Patent Suit Dismissed. Judge Woods dismissed the suit of the Indianapolis Cabinet Company against Herman Lauter, for want of equity. In June, 1890, the cabinet company sued Lauter for infringement on its patent of the sliding cabinet underneath the table. The patent was issued Jan. 25, 1887.

Robinson, J.-When a deand a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence has been filed, in considering the demurrer to the evidence defects in the pleadings cannot be taken into consideration, but by demurring to the evidence objections to the pleadings are not thereby waived, but the demurrer does waive all objections to the admissibility of the evidence.

470. Charles Sumner vs. State. Hancock C. C. Affirmed. Crumpacker, J .-When a minor purchases beer and gives it to an adult, the saloon-keeper is guilty under the statute of unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor to a minor.

478. Lake Erie & Western Railroad Company vs. Alfred C. Mayo. Delaware C. C. Reversed, Black, J .- A railroad company may discriminate in its rates of fare in favor of persons who purchase tickets before entering the cars, but if a passenger is unable, because of the fault of the company, to procure a ticket, he will be entitled to be carried at the ticket rate. He may pay under protest the excess demanded, and afterwards recover it back, but he is not obliged to do so, and if, insisting upon his right to be carried at the ticket rate, he be expelled, the company will be liable for its refusal to carry him. 2. When a passeuger, upon payment of money, expressed an intention of traveling to a certain station, which the conductor would not agree to, and demanded extra fare, which the passenger refused to pay, and he was thereupon expelled from the train, the retention by the conductor of the payment would not give the passenger the right to travel to such station when such payment did not pay the fare that distance.
